

State of New Mexico

Susana Martinez
Governor

Dear Production Executives,

New Mexico, like many states, has been tasked with bringing certainty and predictability to its budgetary process under difficult economic times. New Mexico's film incentive program was recently redefined with great effort to maintain its success while balancing the needs of our state. I am happy with the compromise made during this past legislative session and I support the continued growth of the industry and the creation of more job opportunities for New Mexicans.

We continue to offer one of the most competitive industry incentive packages in the United States. In addition to the film incentives, our job training program and low interest film loans are available for productions shooting in our state.

Our exceptional and experienced crew base is the largest between coasts. New Mexico currently has five studios containing 14 soundstages and over 200 film-related businesses including post-production facilities. Direct flights from Santa Fe and Albuquerque to Los Angeles are just another convenience for studio productions.

With over 300 days of sunshine annually, New Mexico features some of the most awe-inspiring and diverse landscapes in the world. We have a film-friendly community network throughout the state and a dedicated film office whose staff will assist your production through its entirety.

This industry is a very important sector of our state and I am committed to its ongoing success. I look forward to working together in bringing your next production to New Mexico.

Sincerely,
